ABSTRACT

 This informal, interim directory has been prepared to meet the needs of graduate programs, students, and relevant agencies concerned with training resources and professional employment. It lists college and university departments in the United States and Canada currently known to offer graduate training in rural sociology. Each program is described in terms of courses and degrees offered, staff, special programs or emphases, financial aid available, criteria for admission, and degree requirements. Additional information can be secured from sources cited for specific departments. (Author/JLB)

FOREWORD

The Rural Sociological Society is pleased to make available this informal interim directory which has been completed to meet the needs of graduate programs, students and relevant agencies concerned with training resources and professional employment. It lists university and college departments in the United States and Canada currently known to offer graduate training in rural sociology. A brief orientation to resources and special interests of each department is provided; additional information can be secured from sources cited for specific departments.

Any department offering training in rural sociology which has been omitted is invited to submit information to Harold R. Capener, Department of Rural Sociology, 133 Warren Hall, Cornell University, Ithaca, New York 14850, for inclusion in a larger, more formal directory edition.

INTRODUCTION

About Rural Sociology and Rural Sociology Training

Rural Sociology is a branch of sociology. Sociology is the science of human relations, the study of social groups, and the influence of group life on human behavior.

As it has developed in North American universities, rural sociology is not defined by narrow subject matter limits. It is the application of sociological science to rural problems and the social relations of rural areas. Thus, rural sociologists study many of the same problems that other sociologists do, such as population, the community, the family, leadership and organization, the diffusion of innovations, attitudes and public opinion, safeguarding the environment, developing meaningful social indicators to assess quality of life, communication, motivation, youth and old age. They are active in the development of theory and methods for these and other fields, and in the development of general sociological theory and methodology applicable to the understanding of all aspects of group life.

Rural sociology is, however, organized as a somewhat separate profession. While most rural sociologists belong to the American Sociological Association and participate along with other sociologists in the organized activities of the general profession, they have found it useful to have their own special organization and scholarly journal. The journal, RURAL SOCIOLOGY, was founded in 1935 by the Rural Sociological Section of the American Sociological Association, and in 1937 this Section became the Rural Sociological Society. The Society has about 1000 members. In recent years the European Society for Rural Sociology, the Japanese Rural Sociological Society, and other national and international groups of rural sociologists have been organized. In 1964, the first World Congress of Rural Sociology was held in Dijon, France; in 1968, in Enschede, The Netherlands; and from August 22-27, 1972, the Third World Congress is scheduled to be held in Baton Rouge, Louisiana.

In the United States, the Land-Grant state universities employ the largest numbers of rural sociologists. In these institutions they are engaged in the teaching of resident students, in research - usually under the auspices of the Agricultural Experiment Station, and in extension teaching and the application of sociological knowledge through the Cooperative Extension Service. A substantial number of persons trained in rural sociology are also employed by other colleges and universities and large and increasing numbers are working in programs sponsored by government agencies - local, state, and national. In recent years, one of the most important developments has been the demand for rural sociologists in human and community resource development areas as well as in international and foreign aid programs, particularly concerned with community development.

This directory provides information about 25 programs in United States universities and three in Canada where the Masters and/or Ph.D. degrees may be obtained with major training in rural sociology. All of these programs provide sound training in general sociology and others are in departments which include general sociology or agricultural economics.

Besides the student interested specifically in rural problems and people, the student whose interest is in human behavior generally may find that he can get the best research training in a rural sociology study program. Since most rural sociologists in universities are actively engaged in research, there is opportunity for close collaboration between student and teacher in the research process. The student interested in the application of behavioral science knowledge in practical programs will find excellent opportunity to learn and practice in a rural sociology program. The employer looking for young sociologists who are thoroughly trained in theory and method and who have also had training and experience in applying their knowledge in practical programs, or carrying out research oriented to application, will do well to look to the rural sociology departments or programs.

Persons with degrees in rural sociology are by no means limited to working in that branch of sociology alone. Many outstanding sociologists whose reputations have been built in other fields of sociology received their training in rural sociology. These include several presidents of the American Sociological Association. The diminishing rural population in the United States and the world does not mean that the need and demand for rural sociologists is declining. Because of their special training and orientation, rural sociologists are branching out into new related fields and are being called on in a wider variety of tasks. Moreover, more rural research is being done and more programs developed. Demand has never been higher, and it is increasing.

The Rural Sociological Society will be glad to supply further information about the profession and vocational opportunities. Write Howard Sauer, Secretary-Treasurer, Rural Sociological Society, South Dakota State University, Brookings, South Dakota 57007. Each of the universities whose program is listed will gladly supply further information.

Financial Aid:

Research Assistantships provide support at a level of $300/mo. plus tuition and Teaching Assistantships begin at $260/mo. plus tuition. Assistants pay no tuition but are assessed the cost of fees (approximately $56) each quarter.

Criteria for Admission into Graduate Program:

Applications for admission must be received no later than four months prior to the beginning of the quarter in which studies are to begin. The following documents are necessary:

1. The completed application form supplied by the Graduate School;
2. Two copies of certified transcripts of all undergraduate and graduate study;
3. Three letters of reference from sources who are in a position to evaluate academic and professional potential as well as character.

4. Graduate Record Examination scores. Information regarding this examination may be obtained from: Educational Testing Service, Box 955, Princeton, N.J. 08540; or Educational Testing Service, 1947 Center Street, Berkeley, California 94704;
5. A personal statement of professional interests, experience and objectives. This letter, addressed to the Department Chairman, should state the student's academic background, professional goals, and expectations for graduate study in sociology.
6. Applicants from abroad are expected to supply evidence of proficiency in oral and written English. This may be in the form of a written paper submitted with application papers and a statement of oral proficiency preferably determined by an official of a U.S. Embassy or Consulate.

Requirements for Degree:

The basic requirement for a Master's degree is the successful completion and defense of a thesis.

In the Ph.D. program, there are two examinations required by the Graduate School. These are: an Admission to Candidacy Exam (subject matter content) and a Thesis Defense Examination. In addition, the department requires a preliminary diagnostic examination sometime in the second quarter of residence. The purpose is to determine the student's capacity to perform at the doctoral level and to alert the student and his committee to deficiencies so that they may be corrected early in the program.

At the Master's level, students are not required to do course work in a related field, although they are encouraged to do so. At the doctoral level, the student will be required to do course work in the sociology major plus a related field (minor). The minor must be outside the area of sociology.

Financial Aid:

Departmental Teaching and Research Assistantships provide support at a level of $260/month and up; in addition, application may be made for a variety of scholarships and fellowships.

Criteria for Admission into Graduate Program:

Applicants are required to meet the minimum standards of the University of Kentucky Graduate School as described in the "Graduate School Bulletin." A regular application form must be completed and submitted along with a transcript of courses completed showing academic achievement. Graduate Record Examination Aptitude Test scores are requested of United States and Canadian applicants and are essential for fellowship applicants. An undergraduate major in sociology is not required. Completion of the Master's Degree is prerequisite to acceptance in the Ph.D. program.

Requirements for Degrees:

The basic requirement for a Master's Degree is the successful completion and defense of a thesis. Non-thesis option available for students not planning to enter Ph.D. program.

In the Ph.D. program there are two examinations required by the Graduate School. These are: an Admission to Candidacy Exam (subject matter content?) and a Dissertation Defense Examination.

A Ph.D. candidate selects an area of specialization in sociology and a minor outside sociology.

$1,700 to $2,550 for the nine-month session.

Available in the Institute of Urban and Population Research (Department of Sociology) are Research Assistantships related to demographic and other sociological topics, with stipends of $1,800 to $2,100 for the nine-month session.

Available in the Department of Rural Sociology are Research Assistantships related to rural sociological projects, for students specializing in the rural field. Stipends go up to $3,600 for the fiscal year.

National Science Foundation Traineeships and National Defense Education Act Fellowships are also available.

Criteria for Admission into Graduate Program:

Types of Admission: A student meeting all requirements as stated below is normally granted unconditional admission. Applicants who fail to meet all qualifications but who are nevertheless judged by the department and by the Dean of the Graduate School to show promise for successful graduate work may be considered for probationary admission on the merits of their individual cases. Applicants who appear to be admissible but who are unable for good reasons to supply the required credentials prior to the stated deadline may request provisional admission. In such cases complete credentials must be received by the Graduate School not later than sixty days after the first day of classes (forty-five days in the summer term).

Requirements: Requirements for admission to graduate school are as follows: (A) baccalaureate degree from a university or college approved by a regional accrediting agency; (B) point-hour ratios of at least 3.0 for undergraduate work and 3.5 for graduate work based on all work for which a grade is given (A=4, B=3, C=2, D=1, F and WF=0); (C) satisfactory academic standing at the last institution attended; (D) acceptance in the department. Fulfillment of minimal graduate school requirements does not assure acceptance into the department. If in the judgement of the department an applicant lacks an adequate background to pursue graduate work in sociology, he may not be accepted or may be accepted only on a probationary basis.

All sociology majors are required to take the sociology section of the Graduate Record Examination preferably before admission or during the first year in residence. Records will be kept to determine if a particular score should be required for admission.

Requirements for Degrees:

The successful completion and defense of a thesis is required for a Master's Degree.

Three examinations are required in the Ph.D. program: (1) a qualifying examination (an oral examination only) which may be taken in conjunction with the final examination for the Master's Degree or during the first year in residence for the doctoral degree, preferably during the first semester. For students continuing in the department through the Master's and doctoral programs, the decision as to whether the Master's exam will service as the qualifying examination will be made by the student's committee. (2) A general comprehensive examination. Before a student becomes eligible for the general examination, the successful completion of a foreign language examination is required. (3) Final examination after completion of the dissertation.

An internal minor field is required for both M.A. and Ph.D. Degrees.

Financial Aid:

Several Teaching-Research Assistantships are available on a competitive basis at approximately (1970) $250/month. All fees and tuition are remitted. Students are also eligible for a number of university scholarships and fellowships.

Criteria for Admission into Graduate Program:

Applicants are required to meet the minimum standards of the Graduate School, University of Maine, Orono, as described in the current University of Maine Graduate School Catalogue. An application obtained from the Graduate School must be completed and submitted along with a transcript of all college level work, and three letters of reference. Applicants are required to provide the results of their performance in the Graduate Record Examination including an appropriate advanced test.

All applicants from non-English speaking nations and graduates from universities in which instruction is not in English are required to submit scores of the Test of English as a Foreign Language (TOEFL).

Requirements for Degrees:

A minimum of 30 degree hours are required. Students seeking an M.S. Degree must complete a thesis in an appropriate area for which 6 degree hours are normally granted. Specific course requirements for all students include research methods, individual and the community, human factors in resource development, a graduate level statistics course and selected courses in the Departments of Agricultural and Resource Economics and Sociology. Courses in other departments may be taken with the approval of the student's graduate committee.

A departmental written and oral examination is required for graduation for all students.

Criteria for Admission into Graduate Program:

Graduates are required to meet the minimum standards of the University of Missouri Graduate School as described in the "Graduate School Bulletin." A regular application form must be completed and submitted along with a transcript of courses completed showing academic achievement and three letters of recommendation. The Graduate Record Examination Aptitude Test scores or the Miller Analogy Test scores are requested of United States and Canadian applicants and are essential for fellowship applicants. The TOEFL is required of all foreign students. An undergraduate major in sociology is not required, although a minimum of twelve hours undergraduate work must be completed in sociology and closely related subjects. Completion of the Masters Degree is prerequisite to acceptance into the Ph.D. program.

Requirements for Degrees:

The basic requirement for a Masters Degree with thesis is the satisfactory completion and defense of a thesis. For a Masters Degree without thesis the student may elect the option of a 40-hour M.A. or M.S. Degree with the same course work as required for thesis candidates.

In the Ph.D. program all candidates must pass a qualifying exam during the first year of graduate work. A comprehensive exam covering specified areas must be passed no later than seven months prior to the date of the final oral exam (defense of dissertation). The completion of a satisfactory dissertation and its successful defense in a final examination complete the requirements for the degree.

Criteria for Admission into Graduate Program:

Applicants are required to meet the minimum standards of the Cornell Graduate School as described in the "Announcements, Graduate School, Social Sciences." A regular application form must be completed and submitted along with a transcript of courses completed showing academic achievement, three letters of reference, and a statement of the applicant's rationale for seeking advanced study. Graduate Record Examination Aptitude Test scores are requested of United States and Canadian applicants and are essential for fellowship applicants. An undergraduate major in sociology is not required. Completion of the Masters Degree is prerequisite to acceptance in the Ph.D. program.

Requirements for Degrees:

The basic requirement for a Masters Degree is the successful completion and defense of a dissertation.

In the Ph.D. program there are two examinations required by the Graduate School. These are: an Admission to Candidacy Exam (subject matter content) and a thesis defense examination. In addition the department requires a special examination called the diagnostic qualifying exam (given to assess the level of training of students entering the Ph.D. program). Often this examination is given in conjunction with the final completion of the Masters program; otherwise during the first term after entry into the Ph.D. program.

Ph.D. candidates are required to have directed teaching experience while at Cornell.

One major and one minor subject are required for the M.S. Degree; a Ph.D. candidate selects one major and two minor subjects. Students are encouraged to choose minors in other fields, and Ph.D. candidates are required to choose one external minor.

Financial Aid:

Full-time graduate students in sociology are eligible for fellowships, traineeships, assistantships, and scholarships.

Criteria for Admission into Graduate Program:

Admission to graduate study in sociology is limited to students of outstanding promise, as judged by their professors and as evidenced in their academic records. All applicants must submit scores on the aptitude and advanced tests of the Graduate Record Examination. The prospective student is expected to have completed, as an undergraduate, courses in introductory sociology, social psychology, methods of research (including statistics), and sociological theory. Applications from students who have not majored in sociology are encouraged; however, students deficient in their undergraduate preparation are expected to enroll in the appropriate undergraduate courses.

Requirements for Degrees:

Formal requirements for the M.A. in sociology are the satisfactory completion of at least 45 quarter credit hours of graduate courses and the preparation of a research paper. The research paper demonstrates the student's ability to present and critically evaluate research findings, and is defended in a final oral examination during which his competence in the fields of his courses is also judged. No foreign language required.

When the student has completed the appropriate courses, passed the qualifying examination, demonstrated by examination his reading knowledge of one foreign language, proposed an acceptable subject for his doctoral research, and has been recommended by the department, he is formally admitted to candidacy for the Ph.D. When the dissertation is completed and approved by his advisor, a public defense is held at which the candidate presents the results of his research. Each doctoral student is required to have teaching experience during his course of study.

Criteria for Admission into Graduate Program:

A regular application form must be completed and submitted along with a transcript of courses completed showing academic achievement. Three letters of reference, and a statement of the applicant's rationale for seeking advanced study. Graduate Record Examination Aptitude Test scores are requested of United States applicants. An undergraduate major in sociology is not required. Completion of the Masters Degree is pre-requisite to acceptance in the Ph.D. program.

Requirements for Degrees:

The basic requirement for a Masters Degree is the successful completion of 45 hours of course work and defense of thesis. A non-thesis program is also available.

In the Ph.D. program there are two examinations required by the Graduate School. These are: an Admission to Candidacy Exam (subject matter content) and a Thesis Defense Examination.

Two majors and three minor subjects are required for the Ph.D. Degree.

Financial Aid:

Graduate Assistantships and other appointments are available. The particular type of appointment granted may vary and depends in each case upon the qualifications and needs of the student. Half-time appointments carry calendar-year stipends of $3,600 for M.S. candidates and $4,080 for Ph.D. candidates plus exemptions from all tuition costs and fees.

Criteria for Admission into Graduate Program:

For admission to the Graduate School an applicant must have received a baccalaureate degree from an accredited institution, earned under residence and credit conditions substantially equivalent to those required by Penn State. Admission is jointly granted by the Dean of the Graduate School and the department. The entering student in the Masters program should have as prerequisites 3 credits in Rural Sociology, 3 credits in Sociology, and 3 additional credits in either field. If he does not have these prerequisites he may take them at the university during the early part of his Masters program. Students who present a minimum 2.75 junior-senior average (based on 4 points for A's and 1 for D's) will be acceptable to the department providing they have appropriate backgrounds, can demonstrate interest in the field, and subject to the limitations of departmental facilities. Exceptions to these criteria are made for students with special backgrounds, abilities or circumstances. Graduate Record Exams are not required but are helpful in the case of American and Canadian students to aid in evaluation; they are essential for fellowship applications. Completion of the Masters Degree is not prerequisite to acceptance in the Ph.D. program but is strongly encouraged.

Requirements for Degrees:

A minimum of 30 graduate credits is required, of which at least 20 must be earned on campus, with an overall grade point average of 3.0 or more. A minimum of 12 credits in course work in advanced classes, as contrasted with research, must be completed in the major field. A minor is not required. A thesis is mandatory and must be defended in a final exam. For persons going on to a Ph.D., the final exam is also used to judge candidacy for the doctorate. There are no language requirements or comprehensive exams at the Masters level.

No specific number of courses completed or credits earned will assure attainment of the doctorate. The general requirements are based upon a period of residence, the writing of a satisfactory thesis, the passing of comprehensive exams and a final oral thesis defense plus the demonstration generally of being a competent professional able to pursue relevant problems with skill. A doctoral program consists of such a combination of courses, seminars, individual studies, research experience and communication skills requirements as are approved by the Doctoral Committee appointed to handle each individual student. Minor field studies are not required but are encouraged. Comprehensive exams are required of all students in: research methods and statistics, sociological theory, rural sociology, and two areas of special interest specified by the student. The exams are a combined written-oral format.

Admission to the Graduate School:

The university welcomes applications from individuals who consider themselves to be qualified for graduate studies and are sincere in their desires to enter the Graduate School. The Graduate School admits those students whom it believes to be best fitted for its work and likely to profit most from graduate instruction. Applicants must have an overall grade point average of at least 2.250 (on a 4.000 scale) for admission. Students whose quality point average is between 2.250 and 2.500 are granted conditional admission. Those above 2.500 are granted unconditional admission. Applicants must pass the Miller Analogies Test and the Cooperative English Test before being admitted to Graduate School. Successful scores on the Graduate Record Examination or the Graduate Business Test may be substituted for the Miller Analogies Test. Foreign students must have a score of 500 on the TOEFL. Students having a successful TOEFL score will not have to take the Cooperative English Test.

Applications may be obtained by writing the Dean of the Graduate School. Applications for admission and supporting documents should be received in the Graduate Office at least one month prior to the first enrollment. An applicant should request registrars of colleges previously attended to send official transcripts directly to the Dean of the Graduate School. Admission to the Graduate School does not imply admission to candidacy for degree.

Degree Requirements:

The Master of Arts Degree: The Graduate School offers the Master of Arts Degree in Economics and Finance, English, History, Industrial Arts and Technology, Political Science, Psychology, and Social Science. The Social Science candidate must complete an emphasis in Economics, Geography and Earth Sciences, History, Sociology, or Political Science, and at least one course in two of the other Social Sciences. The major must include a minimum of 40 semester hours of undergraduate and graduate credit in the department of the major or in the emphasis with at least 16 semester hours of graduate credit.

The specific degree requirements are as follows: (1) completion of at least 30 semester hours, including a thesis of 3 semester hours, with a minimum of one-half of the program in 600 level courses; (2) language or

Financial Aid:

Opportunities for financial aid to graduate students include: fellowships ranging up from $3060 for the academic year which also pay the additional tuition charge for out-of-state students; research assistantships usually providing $2985 for the academic year or $3648 for the calendar year, and pay the additional tuition charged to out-of-state students; teaching assistantships usually providing $3295 and up (depending upon qualifications and experience) for the academic year as well as the additional tuition charged to out-of-state students and some institutional fees; traineeships usually paying $2400 for the calendar year, as well as all tuition charges; post doctoral fellowships - a limited number of stipends is available in the area of aging and retirement.

Criteria for Admission into Graduate Program:

Undergraduate majors in sociology and rural sociology whose academic work meets the standards for admission to the Departments of Rural Sociology and Sociology and the Graduate School may begin graduate work in the department without deficiencies. Qualified students in other disciplines may be admitted to full standing after meeting certain prerequisites in sociological theory and methods. Admission is selective and is based on undergraduate grades, letters of recommendation from sociologists, GRE scores (for native English speakers) and English language competency (applicants from non-English areas).

Requirements for Degrees:

All students in the combined sociology graduate program must normally fulfill certain requirements in theory and methods jointly agreed upon by the faculties of the two departments. Rural Sociology graduate students are expected to meet these requirements. Doctoral students in the program must write a preliminary examination in either social organization or social psychology as well as in one other subfield. Those in the Department of Rural Sociology usually write the second preliminary examination in either rural sociology or the sociology of economic change, although another option may be selected, such as methodology and statistics or demography and ecology.
